CALL FOR ESSAY CONTEST JUDGES

The Society of Women Engineers – Rocky Mountain Section (SWE-RMS) is in need of volunteer judges for the 2008 Great Women in Science and Engineering Essays Contest. The final student essays are due on Monday, March 3rd.

Typically each first round judge will be responsible for about 10 original essays written by sixth grade students in Colorado or Wyoming as part of our 2008 Great Women in Science and Engineering Essay Contest. Each judge will receive judging instructions, a sample score sheet, and biographies of the Great Women. Judges will be responsible to review and grade each of the 500 word essays and return to me a score sheet and a list of the top three essays from each set by March 21, 2008. Second round judges will receive the top three essays from each of the first round judges. The second round will take place from about March 26 to April 9, 2008.

Prizes will be awarded to the top essays from the second round. The grand prizes include three US savings bonds. Honorable merit prizes include science experiment kits, and honorable mention prizes include books featuring famous women. The finalists will receive an invitation to the Society of Women Engineers - Rocky Mountain Section's annual awards banquet.

If you are interested in volunteering please send an email to sonyareiser@yahoo.com. Once I have received the students' essays, I will contact the volunteers with additional information.

7 HABITS OF HIGHLY INEFFECTIVE MANAGERS

Taken from <http://www.slackermanager.com>

While most of the time here at Slacker Manager we write about how to be a better manager, today I'd like to share some of the habits of the worst managers I've had, and how you too can be a highly ineffective manager.

MONEY BACK GUARANTEE: If you do all of these 7 habits, I can almost guarantee you'll have nobody on your team left after only 18 short months, or your money back!

Responsibility without Authority

Assign people a responsibility, tell them that they are responsible for the outcome, and then don't give them anywhere even close to sufficient authority to make it happen. Perfect for those budding superstars who are threatening to take your job.

Set it and forget it!

I like to call this "Ron Popeil on management." Delegation is for sissies, just throw out the task and let them guess on how you want it done. Especially effective if you never check in on their progress, and then demand it be "done right the first time."

Performance Reviews = Surprise!

Never have weekly meetings with your direct reports. Wait until mid-year, say everything is going "just fine." At the end of the year, make sure to mark associates down for every little thing that anyone ever told you about what they did.

7 HABITS OF HIGHLY INEFFECTIVE MANAGERS

Give them a chance to refute any claims, but don't mark anything but the bad stuff in their year end review. They'll never get that job in the department of their dreams this way, so you'll never have to replace them!

Great Expectations? How about NO Expectations?!?

Setting expectations is for sissies! Don't tell your team what you expect of them, and then hold each of them to an imaginary, and completely random, standard, marking their review full of red ink. After all, if they don't know what you want them to do, they can't possibly do it!

Fight Fires, Don't set priorities!

Give someone on your team a project. Don't tell them how important it is. Keep throwing more little balls at them until they drop the big one. Complain about how they have no idea what's really important to you. Continue until they cry or quit, whichever comes first.

Do the same thing with projects you get. Focus on the urgent, forget the important, and keep fighting those fires!

Focus on weaknesses, not on strengths

It's your team, so your direct reports should be just like you...great at everything! When they're not, lay the hammer down and focus on all the things that went wrong!

Especially outstanding: focus on that which they don't enjoy, is outside of their strength zone, and that they have much room to improve in. Be like the parent that complained about the 1 C on the all A report card! You loved it, why wouldn't your team?

Training is for losers

Stephen Covey encouraged us to "sharpen our saw" by training and reinvesting in our source. Training, schmaining! You know they're going to leave you once they know what they're doing, so why train anyone on anything? Just let them fumble around in their own mediocrity, never mastering their job, so you don't ever have to worry about promoting anyone. This is guaranteed to save your company money for at least the training budget, not to mention nobody ever wastes a day off to get training.

Sadly, I've had 1 or more managers who've displayed 1 or more of these qualities to me, and it's why I don't work for many of the people I once did.

Question for you: What are some of your other best tips on how to be an ineffective manager?

"It's your team, so your direct reports should be just like you...great at everything!"
